due to the Lakewood Village Picnic on September 14th

President's Column

- Craig Crawford
President, LVNA

Come to the Picnic!

Our annual picnic is September 14th don't miss it. We will be having free food and all the excitement that the annual picnic is known for. If you have a salad or a desert, bring it to share with your neighbors. If you have never been to the annual LVNA picnic, then let this be your first one! We will be having the League of Women Voters registering people to vote. The park is wonderful this time of year, all the crowds are gone, and it'll be just you and your neighbors having fun. Other activities are happening, but you will have to show up to find out. Don't miss it! Remember, it's free food.

Dumpster Weekend

The dumpster weekend went extremely well. It was a chance for the neighborhood to come together and do some housecleaning. As usual, we had other areas outside of Lakewood trying to take advantage and leave their garbage in our dumpsters. Some of them were successful, but most were turned away. The dumpster monitors were having a good time talking to the old and new neighbors. This annual event has become time to come together and unite as a cohesive and truly wonderful neighborhood.

Volunteering to Help the LVNA

The LVNA is solely run by volunteers and without volunteers it will wither and die on the vine. We will be having elections in the spring for the new officers to run the organization for the next year, so get ready to be a leader and to be rewarded for helping your neighborhood. Special events also require volunteers: the picnic will need cooks and cleanup crews, the holiday parade will need volunteers to help it go smoothly, and the newsletter needs walkers to deliver the newsletter. So don't be shy, volunteer for the finest neighborhood organization in all of Sunnyvale. Contact any of the board members to volunteer.

A special thanks goes out to Charlene Jolly for her tireless help with the newsletter. Charlene was the person that counted out the newsletters on the Fairwood side and delivered them to the walkers. Thank you Charlene for many years of service. Charlene has expressed a desire to travel and visit relatives in France (could you take me with you, Charlene?), and so we will need a volunteer to take her position. It requires 1.5 to 2 hours each month. If you have the time and would like to volunteer, contact Elena Anderson.

We have new walkers for Burntwood and Tuscon: James Dougherty and his lovely wife Gerlinda. Thank you for taking over the 88-house delivery route!

The LVNA and Code Enforcement

Last month, there was a letter in this newsletter that accused the City and the LVNA of harassing someone who was working on cars. If the person's activities are against city code and is a violation, then its wrong. No one earns the right to break the law because of a veteran status or age. Having a vehicle repair business in a residential area should not be done, whether by a 20 year old or an by 80 year old. In addition to being unsightly, such work can be a hazard to safety and the environment. If you want to be an auto mechanic, you need a properly licensed garage and do the work outside the neighborhood.

Don't blame the LVNA if you get a knock from code enforcement. The LVNA is never used to harass anyone. I personally will call in a report about long weeds, garbage cans being out on the street in the middle of the week, or any other neighborhood-degrading conditions that I see. If you think that you or someone is being treated unfairly by the LVNA, then contact me personally instead of making anonymous accusations in this newsletter. ■

Lakewood Village and the LVNA now have a web site. It's at www.lvna.net. It's not completely done, nor is it perfect, but check it out and watch it grow. Whether you're a new resident or an old-timer, I think you'll find something about our neighborhood that you didn't know about before:

- Lakewood Village history along with economic and demographic profiles and trends.
- LVNA history and accomplishments (and those of its predecessor, the LVRA).
- Current and back issues of the LVNA Villager, including sample issues all the way back to 1958.
- Information and photo galleries from LVNA events, past and present.
- A collection of online resources of local interest, including a calendar of events, all sorts of maps and views of Lakewood Village, and links to many other web sites.

Take a look, and let me know what you think! Send your comments, corrections, complaints, and suggestions to webmaster@lvna.net. ■

Fun, Educational Conference on October 12th

- Tom Freeman
LVNA Secretary

The 9th Annual Conference of United Neighborhoods of Santa Clara County (UNSCC) will be held on Saturday, October 12th, from 8:30AM to 3:00PM at the San Jose State University Student Union Building.

The theme of the conference is: "Building our Nation with Strong Neighborhoods". The strength of our nation depends on the health of its communities, and the creation of healthy, vibrant neighborhoods depends on volunteers like you.

UNSCC is offering educational workshops and networking opportunities to enhance your skills in a wide range of areas: leadership, community building, youth involvement, and cultural diversity are just a few of the workshop topics. The keynote speaker will be Rigo Chacon.

UNSCC has designed a day of enjoyment and fun. The day starts out with a delightful continental breakfast, wonderful speakers, a hot lunch, awards, and a resource fair throughout the day.

Don't miss this great opportunity! For more information, please out: www.unscc.org, or call UNSCC at: 408-286-8661. ■

LVNA Meeting

- Editor

There will be no LVNA meeting in September, due to the Lakewood Village Picnic on September 14th. ■

Pilot Project Update

- Craig Crawford
President, LVNA

The first meeting for the pilot project was held at the Lakewood park building. It was a disappointment, because the turnout was very small. Many people expressed a desire and positive opinion about the pilot project, but they did not live up to expectations by showing up at the meeting. We had one resident and three landlords at the meeting. We had a good exchange about how to get people involved.

A major issue is differences in language and culture. The city said that when they go to the door of a Lakewood residence, many times the person answering the door does not speak English, and the conversation stops there. Letters went out to all the residences and landlords in the pilot project area to let them know of the meeting, but a Vietnamese gentleman who attended the meeting said that for many immigrants, if they get a letter from the city, it goes into the garbage. This is not encouraging.

The chances of the pilot project being successful and moving forward are reduced without volunteers coming forward and helping with this neighborhood-enhancing project. Please let Rich Gutierrez know if you can help his number is 730-7447. Call now. We especially need people that can speak the languages that are common in the neighborhood that can carry the Pilot Program message to those households in which English is not the primary spoken language. ■

Tales from the Village

This is a new feature in The LVNA Villager, suggested by its first writer, Chet Vanek. Do you have a story to tell about life in Lakewood Village? Send it to editor@lvna.net and share it with your neighbors.

I Need To Come Clean

- Chet Vanek

The statute of limitations has, I believe, expired by now so I can get this off my chest without fear of going up the river.

It was about a year ago that the L.N.V.A. Villager was nicely placed in my screen door by our ever-friendly neighbor, Mrs. Rodriguez. When I opened the paper I was greeted by a full-sheet ad from the local (Mercado Center) Ben and Jerry's ice cream shop. "Come in with this ad," it proclaimed, "and get a free sugar cone."

Ooh, a free cone. I figured that sometime in the near future my dear wife would again insist that she and I take a healthful walk to the Mercado Center. I could get a free cone if I agreed. I do need a little reward to get me to do "healthful" things—I had become immune to whining doctors and friends, all tremulously intoning dire dirges about the impending health debacle I was courting by living quietly, and sumptuously. But a whining wife, well some things are inescapable. The best one can do is find a personal reason for doing what she wants.

Sure enough, next evening my dearest decided we must breathe fresh outdoor air and none of my reminders about the hundred different polychlorinated, fluoro biphenyl hydro what'cha ma call-its that pervade modern fresh air would dissuade her.

"Oh, I have a coupon," I said cheerfully, "for a free ice cream cone. Let's go."

She looked at the sheet. "But it's for only one. Where's mine?" she asked.

I looked at the piece of paper. "Easy," I flourished. "One more sugar cone coming up." And I dropped the sheet on the platen of our little household copier and made a counterfeit.

We walked quietly enough toward the scene of the crime. I rehearsed in my mind all the scenes I could remember from movies about counterfeiters—I wanted to pull off the pass without a hitch. All I could remember was a scene (in black and white) in which a wary cashier spots the fake and the felon has to hotfoot it through a street filled with 1950s Studebakers. My mind kept coming back to the possibility that some difference between the original and my copy—a difference I couldn't see but which would be immediately apparent to the clerk at Ben and Jerry's—would betray my crime.

We were walking through Mercado. Crowds, lights, cars, and then Ben and Jerry's. The moment of misdemeanor had arrived. I told my wife that I would go in first with the fake coupon, and that she should wait outside and act as if she didn't know me. I went in.

The interior was all white and brightly lit. Every nuance of my behavior was visible. I had to be cool, like a wise guy under an interrogation lamp. Remember the code of Omerta, I whispered under my breath.

A clerk turned to me. "Can I help you," he smiled from over the counter.

"I got this offer for a free sugar cone," I said. "What is a sugar cone?" Cool. "I'd like to try one."

The clerk's eyes brightened. He reached over for my bogus coupon. I handed it to him with swift nonchalance.

He looked at it with what appeared to be over-long interest. A smile broadened his face. Fast-twitch muscles on red-alert; I was ready to leap over the Studebakers outside.

"Yes, yes. You get a free sugar cone sample with this," he said quietly, even tenderly. He told the sugar cone maker to apply his art. The guy poured some batter on a griddle.

I was relieved but just as quickly lost the sensation. Why was that clerk staring at my fake coupon with such bemused interest? He wouldn't stop. The batter congealed to a golden brown pancake. The clerk was cradling my counterfeit, staring at it. The cone maker began to roll the hot pancake into a cone. The clerk lifted the bogus sheet up to eye-level. This is it, I thought. He's checking for the watermark.

"Here it is," he said to the cone-guy. "Our first one."

The cone-guy nodded and gave the clerk the wrapped sugar cone, and then he took my fake ad, and started giving it the same scrutiny.

These guys are playing with me, I thought. It's a set-up. I'd better keep out of range.

I was about to take a step back when the clerk handed me the finished cone. "Here, enjoy your sample. You are the first respondent to our promotion."

He turned to the cone-maker. "I told you we'd get some interest from promotions in the local papers," he gushed. "It's a good idea."

He turned back and smiled. I returned the smile and, coolly, absconded with the cone.

Now, I had expected that there would be some ice cream in the cone, but at the time, my emotions were such that I felt that if I asked for some, that clerk might have given me a dollop, but only after first slipping one of those exploding red dye packets underneath.

My wife never did go in to use the bona-fide coupon. She said my vibes put her out of eating mode. ■

Letters to the LVNA

- Editor

Names have been withheld unless I have been given explicit permission to print them.

8/12/2002

Dear Editor,

I have lived on the Lake side of Lakewood for over 5 years, and for the most part have been very pleased with my community. As I read in the current Villager of the plights of some of my neighbors, and the corresponding division of the community in response to code enforcement I am compelled to bring forward an issue that I have yet to see discussed in the newsletter: ROACHES.

From the first night I spent with my children and I perched atop the dining room chairs as the large bugs crept under the front and back doors until just yesterday as I was pulling out the years old phone book affectionately known as the roach killer, I have wondered why. Why are these damn things everywhere? Where do they live? Where do they come from? Why does it not seem to matter how clean my home is? And more importantly, when are we as neighbors in our community going to come together to do something?

I spray constantly. I pour poison in my water meter box by the curb, which is where the city tells me they originate, I add door strips to my doors and I keep food and garbage contained and clean. I have called professionals. It does not matter. This time of year, I will inevitably have one or two fall asleep upside down on my dining room or living room floor each week. If you are brave enough to walk the streets after 10PM on any given night, you will encounter hundreds... HUNDREDS of them throughout Lakewood.

Clearly this is a community issue, and certainly one that could bring us together. When will the village, the LVNA, or perhaps even the city take an interest and address this? Certainly, in beautifying our neighborhood, this has got to be an issue. Calling the city prompts them to "bait" my water box. This is clearly a patronizing waste of time, when my neighbors box is a few feet away and goes untouched. I received an advertisement the other day for a new listing on my block. A home for sale at close to a half a million dollars. Filled, I am sure with these night creeping roaches. Too me, this needs to be a priority in the much-anticipated pilot program of code enforcement. A baseline level of living conditions, as the newsletter proclaims, is worthless when we have a roach infestation. Don't talk to me about planting grass, painting fences, lowering the volume, and removing broken cars; do something about the bugs.

- D.M. Haddaway, Lakefair Drive □

8/16/2002

Dear Editor,

This is in response to the LVNA President's Column from last month and "The Right To Be…" article from the previous month.

I very clearly stated that I do care about the quality of life in Lakewood Village, and keeping up the properties we live in, whether we own them or not, and taking pride in our community, and satisfying the needs of public safety.

The first violations that Craig [Crawford] mentioned definitely would involve public health, and therefore public safety, and would not be in the realm of "I can dow what I want to on my property, so butt out".

Barking dogs, crowing roosters, and loud music, are within the realm of talking to your neighbors. In response, your neighbors have an obligation to listen to your complaint, and if your compliant is legitimate, make an adjustment in their lifestyle. If your request is legitimate and is ignored, then yes, you have a right to make a complaint to your public officials. This is what they are there for, pro-active or not.

I must apologize for not explaining my objection to pro-active more clearly. Pro-active, if I understand the term correctly, implies that an agent of the government actively seeks out violations rather than reacting after a complaint.

One case I have in mind that prompted this article happened to a good friend of ours. This couple had a large family and lived in a home they are buying. Needing more room, they converted their garage into extra bedrooms.

The way the story was told to me, someone from the City government was driving around the neighborhood looking for violations, and came across our friend's house. This person from the City entered the property and demanded that the owner open the garage door. The owner couldn't, and he was cited.

When it came to a hearing, the owner was fined a nominal amount. One official complained that the fine was not sufficient to cover expenses, and so the fine was greatly increased. This is policing-for-profit, and I am opposed to it. As it turned out, the owner was later allowed to submit plans that are acceptable to make the rooms legal or reconvert the garage. The fine was also reduced.

Agreed, the owner should have done the conversion legally. But is it really necessary for the City government to go to this extent to maintain a community standard that applies to the entire neighborhood? I would like the City to have some input on this with regard to their policies.

Putting aside the issue of pro-active, I wrote an article asking for the opinions of fellow Villagers. I must say it turned out wonderfully to hear from other citizens of this Village expressing themselves. As I said, this is democracy at its most basic level. This article served its purpose, even if I am later shown to have over-reacted to the above story. Living together and working together means giving up a little of "doing our own thing" for the benefit of the neighborhood we live in, and still have our own lifestyle without undue interference.
- James L. Daugherty ■

Ask the Officer

- Sunnyvale Department of Public Safety

Questions and Answers

Q: What happens when I dial 9-1-1 from my cell phone?

A: All 9-1-1 calls from cell phones are forwarded to California Highway Patrol dispatch centers, which receive over 6 million calls a year statewide. Chances are that callers will receive a recorded message stating that all operators are busy. If have an emergency and you can't get through to 9-1-1 on your cell phone, you can dial direct to the appropriate agency. A list of Sunnyvale's neighboring cities' emergency dispatch lines follows. It is recommended that you program your cell phone with the numbers for CHP in the areas that you frequently travel.

Sunnyvale:	408-736-6244
San Jose:	408-277-8911
Santa Clara:	408-615-5640 or 408-296-2236
Santa Clara County:	408-299-2311
Cupertino:	408-299-3233
Mountain View:	408-903-6922

Q: Where can I go to check that my child's car seat is installed properly?

A: The California Highway Patrol offers car seat safety checks, by appointment, every Thursday at their San Jose office. Phone them at 408-467-5400 to schedule.

Personal Safety Tips:
Crime Prevention on the Street

- Whenever possible, travel with a friend.
- Stay in well-lighted areas as much as possible.
- Walk close to the curb. Avoid door-ways, bushes and alleys where someone could hide.
- Walk confidently, and at a steady pace.
- Make eye contact with people when walking.
- Do not respond to conversation from strangers on the street, continue walking.
- If you carry a purse, hold it securely between your arm and body.

Ask the Officer column relies on questions from Sunnyvale residents. Please send your questions c/o the Sunnyvale Department of Public Safety, Crime Prevention Unit, 700 All America Way, Sunnyvale, CA 94086 or phone 408-730-7199.
